Mine is 51 amp/hours. The answer by Steward Robbins will help you figure out exactly how long. I've noticed that when returning from long road trips, it goes into the charge mode (red light on) and, by the next morning, which would be 8 to 10 hours later, it's on trickle mode (green light on). They said that data is unpublished and not available. If you do not drive your truck for a few weeks at a time you should hook up the b... see more HI, You should not leave your battery go dead, this shortens the life of the battery, 51 divided by the charging rate of 1.25 amps per hour means it took 40.8 hours to charge fully, 32.6 hours to charge to 80% so the battery can be used. So for me that would be 60 to 99 amp hours. So now I've had it plugged in again for about 40 hours and counting, still a solid red light. I had to learn all of this because the only reference to "how long" made by my battery tender "user instructions" included with the battery tender are "a fully discharged 15 amp-hour battery will take approximately 10 hours to recharge to 80% capacity." I had no idea how many amp hours my battery was and therefore was very concerned when I charged it for 24 straight hours and it still was showing a solid red light. Do you? Peter Schneiderler · January 28, 2015 Do you find this helpful? | Report abuse It can take days. I was in the same situation. It worked as calculated. I checked online everywhere and can find cold cranking amps, reserve capacity, and more but not the amp hours. see less It can take days. If you are in this situation, it appears that the conversion for most batteries is between 40 and 60% of the reserve minutes, so multiply the minutes (in my case 150 or 165 depending on where you look) by 4 and 6 to get a range of possible amp hours. I take comfort in all of the reviews on here that say the first charge took 2 days, 4 days, even one said 5 days before they got a solid green light. Before I had the charger, the battery would go dead in the vehicle even with a new alternator. Turns out that almost any car battery will take way more than the 10 hours cited in the manual if it has been run down. HOPE THIS HELPS mIKE see less HI, You should not leave your battery go dead, this shortens the life of the battery. If your battery is totally dead or near dead you should put it on a charger real battery charger, the battery tender is for storage of your car, truck. Haven't had a problem since. I've never timed it. | Report abuse Hard to say, but it can't take too long. The Interstate website says my battery has a capacity of 85. It sounds like you are looking for a charger with much more amperage if you want to charge a dead battery. I have a maxx-65n battery from ever start (wal-mart) that was on a vehicle I bought used. I disconnected it, fearing some kind of malfunction because #3 on the "troubleshooting check list" says if the charger is charging but the green light does not go on that the battery may be defective, take it to be tested. Try a different method it is used to keep a battery at peak charge when it is not used often. | Report abuse Never had to do that, but I am guessing about 4 hours Greg · October 27, 2013 0 of 2 found this helpful. ALSO IT MAY TAKE 2 OR 3 DAYS FOR A TRICKLE CHARGER TO RE-CHARGE A DEAD BATTERY. THE CHARGE RATE IS VERY LOW, .75 OR 1.25 ... If you do not drive your truck for a few weeks at a time you should hook up the battery tender when the battery is fully charged, remember this is a battery tender and a maintainer it keeps your battery charged when not in use for long periods. Steward Robbins · January 31, 2014 4 of 4 found this helpful. hope this helps. THEN I can finally divide by 1.25 to get the time to charge - 48 to 80 hours basically. HOPE THIS HELPS mIKE mike · October 28, 2013 1 of 1 found this helpful. I called wal-mart. It will charge your durangos battery but it will do so very slowly. It says to multiply capacity times .6 to get the amp/hours of the battery. JerseySteve · October 28, 2013 1 of 1 found this helpful.
